of negotiations for a truce in Ireland. The Catholic hierarchy, members of Parliament and of the Government and some of the Sinn Fein leaders are seeking an armistice, at least for the Christman period.

The London Times of Friday gives prominence to a report, carried in this paper earlier in the week, that indirect negotiations are proceeding between members of the Government and the Sinn Fein. The Times understands that Arthur Henderson, the British labor leader, has at least an informal mandate to seek a way to peace. The defeat of the Government in the Lords, where the same home rule bill was amended to give a senate to south Ireland, also is seen as a good omen.

Henderson is in Dublin at the head of a labor commission which is to study conditions, giving particular attention to reprisals. On this point a correspondent of The New York Herallo is informed that demands for a similar inquiry are being made in powerful quarters. It is said that a former Ambassador to the United States is identified with this movement and the clergy of the Church of England also are insisting on an investigation of reprisals.

The burning of fifteen warchouses in Liverpool early in the week was attributed to the Sinn Fein. The Secretary for Ireland but a few days before had told the Commons that the Irish Republicans had mapped out a campaign of the Government, voted to restore the French Embassy at the Vatican being a moral force that France could not afford to neglect.

The trial of George Backer, contractor, for alleged perjury, is under way. He is accused of having made false statements before the Lockwood committee. The testimony so far developed is virtually the same as that which has been given before the committee. It deals with the payment of bribes and graft and corruption in building operations. It is considered likely that the trial of Robert P. Brindell, boss of the Building Trades Council, will begin when Backer's is concluded.

Will the Government obey the crack of Carson's whip which would drive on to the unthinkable catastrophe that shapes itself ahead, or will the engines be reversed in time? Who can say? Passions are growing, but the forces of reason and sanity are growing also. They are strengthened by fact of the fallure of the policy of violence, and even passions are being chilled by the ominous signs that terror once let loose cannot be confined to one shore of the Irish Sea.
